In mathematics, the dot product is an operation that takes two vectors as input, and that returns a scalar number as output. The number returned is dependent on the length of both vectors, and on the angle between them. The name is derived from the centered dot "•" that is often used to designate this operation; the alternative name scalar product emphasizes the scalar (rather than vector ...

DOT is a graph description language. DOT graphs are typically files with the file extension gv or dot. The extension gv is preferred to avoid confusion with the extension dot used by early (pre-2007) versions of Microsoft Word.. Various programs can process DOT files. Some, such as dot, neato, twopi, circo, fdp, and sfdp, can read a DOT file and render it in graphical form.

My first impression: I was pleasantly surprised to find that it's actually not as big as it looks in the picture. The dot sits nicely in the space provided and doesn't move around much once it's in there (I wondered if the hole might be too big and the dot would shift around and sit off-centered, but this turned out not to be an issue at all).

N Never Matches Line Breaks. Perl 5.12 and PCRE 8.10 introduced N which matches any single character that is not a line break, just like the dot does. Unlike the dot, N is not affected by "single-line mode". (? s) N. turns on single-line mode and then matches any character that is not a line break followed by any character regardless of whether it is a line break.
